FOUNDATIONAL GESTALT-THERAPY AND ITS FURTHER DEVELOPMENTS

Theory of self its clinical and practical use

An International Seminar
With

Jean-Marie ROBINE

2016 - July 4-9

Gestalt-therapy, 65 years ago, challenged the psychotherapeutic world through a number of revolutionary proposals. A large part of them are gathered under the name of « theory of self ». However, some of these assumptions were still underdeveloped by our founders and required further unfolding.

Of course, a theory is not a truth. It's a fiction, a construction which is supposed to help us to build meaning to our experience, and that is experience which is important, not theory. But part of our experience could be useless and lost if not understood thanks to theory.

In this international workshop for gestalt-therapists, supervisors and trainers. Jean-Marie Robine, internationally well known through his teaching and back-and-forth between theory and practice, will offer an extended unfolding of the core constructs of the « theory of self », and mostly, will teach how it could be used in our daily practice of gestalt-therapists.

- What is « self » ?
- How every experience is about contacting
- Functions of the self and their observation (partial structures)
- Self as a process and the construction/deconstruction of gestalts
- the so-called « interruptions of contact »
- What does mean « working in a field perspective » ?
